Gallup Poll, Star's New Feature, Gets Answers With "Sampling" System

HOW many times have you come across the findings of the Gallup Poll in leading American dailies—and wondered just how the poll which is so familiar to the American public is conducted? Today, more than six years after its inception, the poll has become one of the most quoted sources in American discussion, whether the topic be politics, the war in Europe, national defense, the farm program or social questions such as education, public health and so on.

war in Europe, national defense, the farm program or social questions such as education, public health and so on. Moreover, its methods have become firmly established and are now being employed by affiliates in four other democracies besides the United States—Britain, since 1936, Canada and Australia, since 1941, and Sweden during the last few months. Here in the United States the Institute has, for more than six years, been forecasting in local, state and national elections—and it has yet to be wrong. The Canadian Institute of Public Opinion recently proved its reliability in measuring public opinion on issues by predicting the outcome of the Canadian plebiscite within 3.5 per cent of absolute accuracy.

COUNCIL CASTS SPLIT VOTE ON LIQUOR CURFEW

Proposal for Midnight Closing Gets First Reading; Bar Owners Protest.

The ordinance regulating the hours for beer parlors and places where liquor is sold was automatically held over for a second reading last night when city council voted six to three for the suspension of the rules that would bring the legislation up for final action.

A three-fourths majority vote is required to suspend the rules and proceed to the second reading of an emergency measure during the same council meeting. However, a two-thirds vote at each of three successive meetings would pass the ordinance. The next reading will come on June 8. Voting for the ordinance were Councilmen Bachelder, Wilhelm, Jones, Elsie Johnson and Selby. Opposed to the ordinance as drawn up were Councilmen Robinson, Simmons and Barnhard.

Opposition to the ordinance was based on establishment of the hours between 12 midnight and 6 a. m. as the period during which sale of beer and liquor would be prohibited. These against the measure said they felt the closing hour should be extended until 1 or 2 a. m.

DEMONSTRATION ON CANNING PLANNED

and field women, said of the canning demonstration. "War has called our cans to order. Home canning and new devices must be used to cut down the amount of tin that goes into cans, without cutting out the cans for putting up our essential fruits and vegetables.

"Canners are not permitted now to can such foods as dried beans and dried peas because the tin-plating must be used sparingly. We will be obliged to prepare our tinned beans at home as our grandmothers used to do.

"To figure a canning budget is particularly important now, because large quantities of food are being used by our armed forces, and some are sent to allied countries. To produce and preserve your own food means our trucks and trains can be used for transporting war materials."

Ohio WPA Program Faces Drastic Cut
By The Associated Press
COLUMBUS, O., May 26 — Ohio's already sharply curtailed WPA program likely will be trimmed 60 to 70 per cent during the next fiscal year, spokesmen said today. The estimate was based on President Roosevelt's recommendation that congress allow only $280,000,000 for the program nationally during the year beginning July 1.

Expenditures in the state for the year ending June 30 are expected to be about $38,000,000, cutting this two-thirds, would provide possibly $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 for the new year.

The WPA now is operating in only 61 of the state's 88 counties, and as of May 19 a total of 35,805 persons were carried on the rolls. A year ago there were 81,507.

Mexico Then and Now

WHEN Mexico's betrayal into a pro-German position in World War I is compared with its firm policy today, the fruits of good diplomacy are plain.

Mexico in 1942 can not be betrayed by weak and desperate political leadership into action inimical to its own interests. Thanks to its own development in politics, economics and sociology—and thanks to whatever assistance it has received from the United States—it is now a relatively stable nation enjoying closely coordinated political leadership in behalf of all its people. Their welfare is tied closely to that of the anti-Axis bloc. Whatever whispers of Axis intrigues and plotting may have been heard, Mexico has taken its stand where it belongs—against the encroachment of European and Asiatic influences on North America. The United States, which has done perhaps more than any other nation to promote good neighborliness, has abundant reason now to be thankful for the good neighborliness of Mexico. Germany, apparently, saw no reason even to try to experiment with its divide-and-conquer formula this time; its deliberately provoked Mexico into a declaration of war.

The moral should not be neglected. Good neighbors are strong neighbors. Mexico in 1914, confused by revolution, was a pushover for German intrigue, which had only to corrupt certain corruptible leaders to have effect on the whole country. Mexico in 1942, confident in its own stability and strength, has become one of the rising powers of the western hemisphere—no longer a cat's paw for the plotters who have dreamed for so many years of claiming the American continent for themselves.

One Way To Use the Normandie

CONGRESSMEN already know this, but perhaps the navy needs to be reminded that the Normandie fiasco is one of the sharpest pains in the neck that taxpayers are complaining about these days. The hurt hasn't been helped any by news that the damage to the ship now is to be undone at a cost of "several million dollars."

It's possible a better way to dispose of the Normandie would be to let it half submerged as a pointed reminder to the millions who would gaze at it that two things in this world always are mighty expensive. One of them is thoughtlessness, the thing that made the disaster to the Normandie possible. If even ordinary care had been practiced, the ship wouldn't have caught fire, wouldn't have been filled with water by a stupid blunder in firefighting, wouldn't have capsized, wouldn't have to be salvaged.

The other expensive thing is a white elephant. The Normandie was a headache to the French. To the French people, who sweated out the money for the subsidy required to meet the losses incurred in its operation, it never was anything but an extremely expensive sop to the vanity of a handful of armchair admirals who wanted the biggest ship. It now has been passed along to Americans, who will have to be forgiven for feeling the same way about it.

Paying Cash for Taxes

CONGRESS plainly does not intend to authorize collection of income taxes at the source unless assured in advance that voters favor the plan. There is no shortage of arguments in its behalf.

It amounts, in effect, to a cash and carry plan for taxes. As collected at present, income taxes are paid more often than not out of current earnings for money already spent. While this is not inequitable when rates remain the same over a period of years, it is a grim fact to many Americans this year that they would be much better situated if they had been forced to follow a pay-as-you-go policy on 1941 income taxes. The rise in the tax rate, together with a rise in the cost of living, caught them short of money they could have saved in 1941.

There will be claims, of course, that it is un-American to deny wage earners the right to handle their own money, make their own budgets and sink or swim on the weakness or strength of their own planning. These claims can be disposed of easily—let wage earners have the option of paying their taxes in cash or running a charge account payable on March 15, 1943. While no one ever worries about the ability of employers to take on one more bookkeeping job, most of them already are reconciled to this burden; social security payments broke the ice long ago.

Aside from convenience, the compelling argument in favor of a withholding tax this year—the sooner the better—is the absorption of wages that will be needed for tax payments next March before it can be used as buying power now. It is an anti-inflation device. If it were not, also, a talking point for those who take great delight in finding talking points for the sheer delight of talking, its congressional passage without serious opposition would be assured.

News Behind the News

Wallace and Hull Sponsoring Radically Different Post-War Economic Plans.

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, May 26.—Mr. Roosevelt today reaped the fruits of Vice President Wallace and his named board of economic warfare again last week and told it to stop reaching deeper into the prerogatives of State Secretary Hull.

Everyone outside has considered this argument an uninteresting technical dispute over power. Not much public attention was drawn to it.

In my opinion, the issues involved constitute the second most important story in Washington and the world. Down beneath the conflict in authority, it seems to me, is a basic fundamental difference in opinion as to how to run the post-war world. The manner in which these two opposing forces are eventually allowed to determine the course of the world is a matter for perhaps any generation.

The opposing forces do not get along. But this time the conflict is not a mere clash of egos. It is a clash of two different philosophies of life. The one is a philosophy of the Washington group and the other is a philosophy of the Hull group. The latter is a philosophy of the world.

Wallace Plan

In the last place, one side is thinking in terms of a post-war economic warfare. Mr. Wallace's primary intent is to prepare a plan for the post-war world. A few weeks back (May 9) he made a speech called "The price of free world victory." It seems to be drawing considerable reprint publicity because of the attention it did not attract at the time.

In that speech Mr. Wallace said a lot about liberty with which everyone agreed (no one is against world liberty anywhere in our time). A point can be accepted as a unanimously adopted, and then to illustrate his post-war program with an anecdote as follows:

"Half in fun and half seriously, I said the other day to Madame Litvinoff:

"The object of this war is to make sure that everybody in the world has the privilege of drinking a quart of milk a day."

"She replied:

"Yes, even half a pint."

The peace must mean a better standard of living for the common man, not merely in the United States and England, but also in India, Russia, China and Latin America—not merely in the United Nations, but also in Germany and Italy and Japan."

Inadequately but pointedly this illustrates what Mr. Wallace and the thinkers with whom he has surrounded himself are driving at. His right hand men are Milo Perin and Louis H. Bean, former officials and economic advisers in Mr. Wallace's former agriculture department. Their tendency is to look at the world through farmers' glasses, and to judge their vision along new deal spending and social reform lines.

A World New Deal

They want a new deal of the world to come out of this war.

They talk of diet in India and China, working hours and needed ease in Japan and Germany, the necessity for industrializing small and remote nations, a lot more spending by us and a lot more moral reforming by us to bring these things about.

The speeches of Mr. Hull and his group of associated thinkers do not sound like that. Around Mr. Hull are Herbert Feis, economic adviser; Assistant State Secretary Adolph Berle; Leo Pasovolsky, special assistant; and even Norman Davis sits in occasionally. Theirs seem to be the practical trade approach in contrast to Mr. Wallace's spending-socialist-visionary approach.

Of course, both sides occasionally work into their public utterances a little of the other side's medicine, but their emphasis is definitely contrary, although they are only "overlapping," "duplicate," and "intermingling."

The Hull group lays heavily upon the Hull reciprocal trade means of establishing a new world, abolition of tariff barriers, and restrictions of trade, free access to raw materials. As I set it, their idea is not so much to remake the world, as to make it work.

Presumably they would not finance industrialization of China, for instance, but would swap our typewriters, automobiles and industrial products for what the Chinese already have, soybeans, silk, etc. They do not seem to me to be worrying so much about whether a Belgian worker would have a five, four, three or two day week, or whether he drinks milk or beer, but would take the products of his labor in return for some of ours.

To Involve Expense

It seems true the way Hull's boys are thinking might cost us considerably less money than the way the Wallace boys want to go about it, but the now coalescing theory is not to be confused.

One of his men is working on an international long-term credit plan in which some organization like the RFC would invest large sums of our money in underdeveloped nations to enable them to produce.

Also both sides agree the world expects to depend on us for food and clothing immediately after the war, and there must be furnished like the war implements—on credit.

As Mr. Roosevelt has divided them now, they are to keep out of each other's hair as much as possible and act polite to each other (as they certainly are), but the question Mr. Roosevelt will have to decide eventually is which side is right, and he may take a look, before deciding, at the size of the treasury debt after the war to see how much world new dealing we can afford, and how much taxes the people of this country will want on be able to pay to finance it.

Argentine Crisis Looms

Nazis' First Big Test May Be Near in South America.

By JOHN LEAR

Wide World Writer

WASHINGTON, May 26.—The first big test of the Nazis' ability to cripple the war effort of the United States by fomenting revolt in South America may be taking shape in Argentina.

A political crisis on the horizon, centred on the eyes of the president—who is not president of that country.

Dr. Ramon Castillo, New York eye specialist, has gone to Buenos Aires to see what treatment is necessary for the eyes of the titular chief of the Argentina republic, Roberto Ortiz.

The eyes of Roberto Ortiz were the reason for his retirement from the presidency about two years ago.

In Ortiz's absence, the duties of the president have been exercised by Vice President Ramon Castillo, whose administration adopted a policy of "neutrality toward all" in the war and was responsible for preventing a unanimous new world break with the axis powers at the American foreign ministers conference in Rio de Janeiro.

If Ortiz's ailment could be cured, there would be no legal reason why he should not return to the presidency.

And if Ortiz should return to the presidency, his friends have indicated he would comply with the popular demand within his country to break Argentina away from all connection with the axis. It is a political axiom in Buenos Aires, however, that in spite of his health Ortiz would not have quit the presidency even temporarily had he had the support of the army.

At the time Ortiz retired from official life, former President Augustin Justo, a general with a large political following in the army, was against him. Justo previously had helped Ortiz become president. But they split on domestic issues. Today Justo, who wants to be president again, approves more of Ortiz's non-Americanism than he does of Castillo's neutrality.

That leaves one crucial unknown factor.

How much of the historic German influence, flowing from German training and German-made weapons is left in the Argentine army?

ROBERTO ORTIZ

Some say this influence is strong. A few identify it as the test case of Castillo's refusal to line up with the United States. Others aver that Nazi power is more propaganda than actuality.

Whatever the truth may be, Hitler can be depended on to use the influence to its fullest extent to prevent Argentina from joining the world-wide front against his "new order."

Would Use Force

If the chances look strong enough, the Nazis will not hesitate to use violence. Observers fear they might use Ortiz's return to power as excuse for such an outbreak.

The possibility of Ortiz's return to the presidency was suggested when the Argentine congressional delegation which visited Washington last fall brought a personal message from Ortiz to President Roosevelt. Ortiz's son later visited the White House.

If Ortiz attempts a comeback, the world may expect to see how strong the Nazis stand. It will not be a pushover. Justo is against Hitler. So are some of the best brains of the Argentine army, who have seen the arms plants and the aims of the United States since Ortiz retired.

If signs of Ortiz's intentions in international affairs are being read aright, his return to office probably would be the Nazis' last real chance to call a showdown in South America short of armed invasion.

From News of Other Years

TEN YEARS AGO

It was Thursday, May 26, 1932. Karl S. Kummer, field secretary of the Ohio Chamber of Commerce, told Marion business men and other citizens to pool their efforts and part of their resources to hasten economic recovery. The advice was given at a noon banquet in the Eagles temple at the first of a series of "Forward Marion" meetings.

Harding High school granted diplomas to 223 seniors in the annual commencement exercises at the pavilion in Garfield park. Dr. E. B. Bryan, president of Ohio university at Athens, was the speaker.

Julia Hughes, 19-month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Meric Hughes of South Vine street suffered only minor injuries when she fell from a second story window of the Hughes home. The force of her fall was broken by shrubbery along the side of the house.

Marion county farmers reported that spring crops were suffering badly from lack of rain.

Declaring all offers unreasonably low, Service Director E. O. Unepher rejected seven bids for horses and equipment used in the garbage collection department. Sixty-five bids were received. The lowest bid was $282. The annual St. Mary High school junior-senior prom was held at Hotel Harding.

TWENTY YEARS AGO

It was Friday, May 26, 1922. "A new period of prosperity and business progress is near at hand," Judge Elbert Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corp., told the annual meeting of the Iron and Steel Institute in New York.

Transportation was crippled and no newspapers appeared in Rome as the result of a general strike called by Socialists following a strike with Mussolini's Fascists.

Comptroller of the Currency, D. R. Crissinger (of Marion), told a meeting of the Pennsylvania Bankers association in Pittsburgh that foreign debts due the United States were one of the chief handicaps to the restoration of the gold standard over the world.

Secretary of Agriculture, Wallace issued a statement denying that he contemplated offering President Harding his resignation from the cabinet.

Hope was held for the recovery of Wilbur Ruppell, Phillies pitcher, who suffered a fractured skull when hit over the right ear by a line drive from the bat of Tom Griffith, Brooklyn right fielder.

The committee in charge of the Marion centennial celebration announced that among speakers for the observance to start July 2 would be President Harding, National Legion Commander Hanford MacNider and General John J. Pershing. The committee also announced that the centennial parade would be six miles long.

A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Chester Daly of Marshall street.

Today and Tomorrow

Need Seen for Greater Navy Department
 Effort To Meet Submarine Problem.

By WALTER LIPPMANN

IN CONNECTION with last week's official optimism and the official warnings against optimism the real point at issue is not the morale of the people. It is the conduct of the war. More specifically, the objection to the official publicity is that it kitted off the most critical weakness in the conduct of the war, which is shipping. The first White House statement in its emphasis on the production of ships gave assurance which the whole shipping situation does not justify. The joint army-navy report ignored altogether the battle with the submarine. At the end of the week, in conjunction with the warning not to be over-optimistic, the nation was told optimistically that the submarine "problem," like the others confronting us, is being solved.

Whatever may have been the intent, the effect of this train of publicity would, if it is not challenged, be to deflect the attention of congress and of the press from the shipping problem. They can not afford to let themselves be deflected. Public opinion has a part to play in the solution of the shipping problem. For the solution of that problem depends upon overcoming inertia in high places and upon reinforcing the men within the services and the government departments who are fighting an uphill fight against place-holders, bureaucrats, vested interests and inadequacy.

Troublesome Matter

The struggle for greater efficiency is troublesome and disagreeable, because it can not be argued out on the level of general principles and impersonal data. It turns on men in key positions, and therefore, no matter how restrained the criticism, it causes pain to men who have worked hard, and loyally, and well—and whose only fault may be that they have grown old and tired, or are not equal to an unprecedented situation.

In a perfect world they would recognize their own limitations, would delegate their authority, or would retire, or their supporters would recognize their limitations and translate them quickly and honorably to other posts. In fact this does happen fairly often. But it does not always happen, and in many, many instances it does not happen until there is a disagreeable row and enough outside pressure to force a change. It is too bad. For in the course of these rows reputations are damaged and feelings are hurt and friendships are broken up. But that is the way things are, and at times that is the only way in which necessary things are done.

It is plain that neither congress, nor the press, nor the general public can tell the navy department and the shipping authorities how to solve the shipping problem. All they can do is to hold the responsible officials responsible for the results and bring pressure to bear where the organization or the personnel appear, after inquiry, to be inadequate.

Pressure will, I believe, have to be brought upon the navy department if the campaign against the submarine is to be waged more successfully. For the conduct of this particular campaign, which we must distinguish sharply from the operations of the navy in the Pacific and in the North Atlantic and elsewhere, the navy department is subject to criticism on several counts.

Escort Vessels

There is first of all the fact that the navy does not yet have enough escort vessels to protect shipping on the East coast and in the Caribbean. This shortage may be due in part to errors of professional judgement in regard to specifications before we entered the war, in part to delays and disappointments in some phases of production. But it is due also, there is reason to think, to the fact that the navy does not have in charge of ship construction a man who is master of the art of mass production. Naval

They threw away many things that they treasured, but their lives depended on parting with all not essential to life. May be we are carrying excess cargo right now: "And we being exceedingly tossed by a tempest, the next day we lightened the ship"—Acts 27:18

The WAAC

We Are Glad That the
 Has Realized Possibili-
 Women in Its Military Se-

By DAMON RUNYON

A S a long-time advocate of more a service for the ladies, naturally I am gratified by the organization of the Women's Auxiliary Army Corps.

I think, too, that no better selection could have been made than Mrs. O. Hobby of Texas, a young mother, a type of American woman, and a lady of considerable intelligence and ability.

As I understand it, the first organization of the WAACs will number about 25,000, undoubtedly be expanded as the war corps becomes more and more apparent, and will be called auxiliary privates, who will be as carefully selected men of the army and navy.

Thus, the United States finally recognizes a potent force that has given consideration in almost every line of the world in time of war but which nation has always been permitted to around rather haphazardly and without cohesion that will come of the recognition.

It has been demonstrated in Greece, in Russia, in China and in the enemy that women, properly organized as a branch of the armed forces, can be valuable. But in the United States they have been feeling that the ladies had in war service beyond nursing and the soldiers with hot coffee and dough canisters and then only more or less in capacity.

THIS attitude is surprising in a nation that has taken pride in the superior lady athletes, the swimmer, the golfer, the player and horsewoman, and that has opened to the ladies every field of achievement in which they may think the chance. The WAACs represent the recognition in the United States of the value of women since they were given.

Of course it is a non-combatant organization meaning that the girls will not be exposed to any actual fighting. But their service is just as valuable as that of the men enlisted in the army and navy assigned to necessary non-combatant WAACs will probably eventually be release many of these men to the combat line.

I think there is also great value in soldier as a symbol of patriotism. I expect a little kidding at first from the men but those who indulge in the kidding be sure of their own military status. The uniform of her country will scarce object of jesting on the part of a gentleman in the same garb.

I note that Mrs. Hobby, on being sworn the director of the new force, was asked a little kidding at first from the men but those who indulge in the kidding be sure of their own military status. The uniform of her country will scarce object of jesting on the part of a gentleman in the same garb.

SHE indicated that the attributes of femininity are not to be tampered with reason. I think that is a sound decision, because a lady becomes a soldier in the sense in also making her, a kompopo. Like to suggest to Director Hobby that she should care in the style of cap to be by her command and not select that type of headgear worn by the WAACs.

Those English cakes really take a biting. Of course if all of Director Hobby could look like Joan Fontaine in the thing would be all right. You will see mean when you see the picture "The All." But alas, the English cakes are cake make the average doll look more like switchman than Joan Fontaine.

As for the American WAACs have with gentlemen private soldiers, suppose relax on that point and let nature take its course. (Copyright, 1942, King Feature Syndicate)

Just Like a Story

By The Associated Press

AKRON, O.—"It was just like those magazine stories."

That's how navy pilot Edwin Kroeger described his part in the surprise raid bases in the Gilbert and Marshall Islands February in which he suffered an injury before he landed his plane safely.

In a letter to an Akron friend, Kroeger wrote it is like to be in an aerial dog fight 31 Japs buzzing around his plane's tail.

He wrote: "Since the navy department released the story, I'll give you the do."

"Our first objective was singling out a target. The second attack turned out different story, for although we went their fighters jumped on us before we over to bomb their airport."

"I figured too close, for both anti-air fighters were after me by then. I did anti-aircraft but in maneuvering to get fire, I cut my speed and a fighter got in on me that sounded like hail. It was stuck entered the fuselage, ricocheted ignition plate and deposited the jackknifed."

"I thought a bullet had just grazed the foot for it didn't hurt much but I got sore then, and booted the plane and threw my attacker's aim off, reaching soon afterward."

"I thought there were only one or two ers after us, but my gunner, who scratched, said we had 31 on our tail; see they are just a bunch of poor Kroeger said."

The pilot, who is the son of Mrs. Kroeger of Akron, has returned to active duty after convalescing in a Hawaiian hospital.

Plan To Give Cleveland Clear Field Falls.

By The Associated Press
COLUMBUS, O., May 26—A campaign to give Roy T. Miller of Cleveland an unobstructed path to the Democratic gubernatorial nomination crumbled today under the steadfast refusal of three women candidates to step aside.

At the end of a "harmony program" meeting last night, Miller walked out and said: "I am not a candidate for governor. I am very grateful to those who have elected me to be a candidate."

geared primarily to the number of people polled. In fact, 90 percent of the people interviewed were under 40 years of age. And, 75 percent of the whole sample were under 40. What makes this possible is the "stratification" or representation of the respondents. The researchers used a "quota" system, which is a method of choosing people of different ages, races, and social classes, and so forth, to represent the population. The Gallup Democracy and Republicanism study, the cross-section of a selected sample, a poll of only a relatively few thousand people can be highly accurate, as the Gallup series in the last six years shows.

The pollsters are confident through a staff of more than 1,000 interviewers throughout the country. Interviewers receive assignments each week, knowing the type of people to interview and the type of questions to ask. Each interviewer is supplied with a list containing carefully worded questions. Yet are then interviewed on been interviewed. This complaint is because the Gallup company is in the public mind because of a mass sampling technique—the old "telephone booth"—rather than straw polls. In the modern poll no attempt is made to interview large numbers of people, because they are so clearly demonstrated that accuracy does not depend on numbers. The Gallup Poll makes no attempt to sample every county in a state. It selects communities which, either singly or in combination, are barometers of public sentiment.

The form of government we live under is a representative form of government. What will be the effect on representative government if the will of the majority is known at all times? Will legislators become mere puppets, and the function of representation be lost?

Here is what Dr. Gallup himself has to say about such questions:

"Under a system of frequent opinion measurement, the function of representation is not lost for two reasons. First, it was understood that the people have not the time or the inclination to pass on all the problems that confront their leaders. They cannot be expected to express judgment on technical questions of administration and government.

"Second, it is not the province of the people to initiate all legislation but to decide which of the programs offered they like best. National policies do not spring full-blown from the common people. Leaders know what the general will of the people must take the initiative in forming policies that will carry out the general will and must put them into effect.

"Before the advent of the sampling referendum, legislators were not isolated from their constituents. They read the local newspapers, they counted the votes in their districts and when they received letters from the people they entertained dele-

If the inquiries were pressed, it would be found that naval construction is in the hands of men who know a great deal about the ancient art of shipbuilding, but not much about the new art of mass production. The fact is that the navy department is not properly staffed to get the production of the escort ships which the navy must have.

Then, the navy department is not properly organized and staffed

The story of the loss of the Normandie shows how far we were only a few weeks ago from having unity of command or the will to exercise it along the At-marine war is being fought. We now told that the confusion of authority which led to the loss of the Normandie has been cleared up. The question still remains whether the new authority is being exercised in a spirit radically better than that which prevailed when the Normandie was lost.

If the question is delicate, it is also critically important. For in great battles the quality of the commander may well be decisive—good equipment and brave men are not in themselves sufficient. This is peculiarly the case in the campaign with the submarine, where there is such an immense premium upon initiative, inventiveness, improvisation and the capacity to inspire men in their long vigils and their monotonous hardships. The port of command in this battle is one of the great commands in the world, and the man who can exercise that command must eventually be found.
